For the purposes of this part of the code, bullying is defined as offensive, intimidating, malicious or insulting behaviour, an abuse or misuse of power through means which undermine, humiliate, denigrate or injure the recipient" (ACAS guide for managers and employers – bullying and harassment at work). Harassment is defined in the Equality Act 2010 as:-

Unwanted conduct related to a relevant protected characteristic which has the purpose or effect of violating an individual's dignity or creating an intimidating, hostile, degrading, humiliating or offensive environment for that individual.

Bullying and harassment can be conducted face to face, through written and electronic communication, by telephone or by the distribution of images and messages to third parties.

Examples of bullying and harassment are set out below and apply equally to a member's relationship with other members, employees, customers, residents, and the employees and directors of other organisations which do business with the council.

Examples of types of bullying and/or harassment:

Some examples of types of bullying which could also be classed as harassment if the unwanted conduct is related to a protected characteristic, are:-

Serial bullying:

This is where the bully targets people one at a time, covering his or her tracks and moving on when there is a danger of being held accountable.

Pressure bullying:

This is where personal or work-related stress or pressure causes a person to become short tempered, irritable or oppressive at work towards others, perhaps unwittingly, and this behaviour deteriorates into bullying. It is similar to secondary bullying.

Corporate bullying:

This is where an employer uses coercive methods, for example the threat of dismissal or an inappropriate amount of surveillance, to oppress employees and impose draconian work conditions.

Cyberbullying:

This is misuse of the internet, email or mobile phones to send aggressive messages and threats. The impersonal nature of these tools makes them ideal for bullying.

Predatory bullying:

This is where the bully picks on a victim to demonstrate power to others.

Dispute-related bullying:

This is where bullying develops out of a conflict that has festered and "got out of hand".

Merry-go-round bullying:

This is where the bully chooses different people to bully on a regular basis, leaving everyone on edge wondering when it will be their turn.

Good-cop/bad-cop bullying:

This is where people work in tandem, one of them appearing friendly to elicit the person's "weak points", and then passing this information on to another person to enable him or her to target the bullying.

Vicarious bullying:

This is where someone is deceived and/or manipulated by another person into carrying out aggressive behaviour on his or her behalf.

Gang bullying:

Sometimes referred to as "mobbing" in the US, this is where the victim is bullied by a group, often with a ringleader who co-opts others through manipulation, fear or coercion.

Sexual harassment

This is where a person receives unwanted attention of a sexual nature which makes them feel uncomfortable, or which feels threatening or demeaning, whether it is conducted in private or public. This can include the use of inappropriate language or images.
